Instruction Manual

Position the inflatable part of AquaFab on the back and secure the velco on the belly-button. Don't blow up the two inner tubes completely, it has to be soft to the touch. Help the velco adhere, always making sure that the kid feels comfortable. Once in the water, let the kid start moving with the chin along the water (the water should lightly touch the kid's mouth) and spur him immediately to swim using the doggy paddle style, moving his arms ("digging" in the water) and legs (pedaling). If the balance is unstable, take him by his hands and follow him through his movements, helping him to "dig" (so much for 15-36 months children but also 3-6 years children who never attended swimming lessons). After a few losses of balance, the kid will start swimming in complete autonomy. As the kid start swimming with his chin out of the water, the two inner tubes have to be deflated gradually. If the kid is floating too vertically, put AquaFab on the waist so the legs can go up. If the kids is floating too horizontally (with his feet going out of the water), AquaFab has to be positioned further up, just below the armpit. The horizontal floating will start from 4 years onwards, when the kids usually start swimming by moving the legs properly.
